METHODOLOGY

THE WEEK Hansa Research Best University Survey 2017 ranks multi-disciplinary and technical universities (government, private and deemed) recognised by the UGC that offer full-time postgraduate courses in at least two disciplines and graduated at least three batches of students for postgraduate programme.

Perceptual data collection

A primary survey was conducted with 233 academic experts in Ahmedabad, Bengaluru, Bhopal, Bhubaneswar, Chennai, Dehradun, Delhi, Gandhinagar, Gurgaon, Guwahati, Noida, Hyderabad, Indore, Jaipur, Kolkata, Lucknow, Mumbai, Patna, Pune and Vadodara. The sample was selected ensuring proper representation of all 20 cities.

A closed-end questionnaire was given to all the stakeholders, asking them to nominate and rank top 20 universities in India. Of the total 233 interviews, 11 qualitative interviews were done by the research team.

Factual information collection

A dedicated website was created as an interface and the web link was sent to more than 500 universities. Advertisements were also published in multiple issues of THE WEEK, inviting universities to participate in the survey. Forty-six universities responded with their information. Some universities were not ranked as they did not wish to get ranked. Data for the remaining universities were used for rankings and validations.

Ranking of universities was based on a composite score derived by combining the perceptual score for the university (based on the nominations made by experts) and factual score (based on the data submitted by the universities). Some top universities could not respond to the survey with factual information. For them, composite score was derived by combining the perceptual score for the university with an interpolated appropriate factual score based on their position in the list.

Final score for a university was calculated adding perceptual score in all India and factual score for the university (600). Perceptual score for a university in all India was calculated based on the number of nominations received and the actual ranks given to the university in all India. Factual score was calculated using the information collected from universities and other secondary sources.
